MI AMADA
CIUDAD MURADA:
The Literary Landscape of Intramuros

with

Writers draw inspiration from the places they visit or inhabit. In the case of Nick Joaquin, for instance, his love for Intramuros produced a canon of literary works that feature the Walled City as a subject or a setting. Other writers have also written about Manila from the Spanish Colonial Period up to the present, and these works reflect how the physical and sociocultural landscape of the district transformed over time. As we explore the stories written about our Noble and Ever Loyal City, we will discover how fiction can tell the history of a place—its ups and downs and ever changing fortunes—in surprisingly engaging and perhaps more endearing ways.
